New home für secondary school building

Watch our project video* :

- PORR Germany . Complex shell construction for the Torquato-Tasso-Straße secondary school, Munich

A snapshot of the construction site shows that the project and construction management, shell construction trades, machine operators and construction site logistics of PORR Hochbau Region Süd worked together perfectly.

Each building was given a separate entrance to create its own address. The ground floor serves as a connecting element, linking the units like a platform and enabling internal access. Hochbau Region Süd was responsible for the centre building and east wing.

Meeting deadlines and high quality first and foremost

With a construction period of 12 months, the client's key requirements were adherence to deadlines and high quality through increased tolerances. PORR met these requirements thanks to its many years of experience and a strong, interdisciplinary team.

One challenge was the execution of the escape balconies and stairs in exposed concrete quality - these are usually manufactured and delivered as prefabricated parts. The Munich team mastered this task through accurate work preparation in coordination with the architect and close and trusting cooperation with the subcontractors.

‘Our delivery concept was precisely planned and thought through in advance,’ explains project manager Marijana Karadza. ‘We planned and developed the delivery concept intensively over a period of two months.’
